Q16 Understanding Check

Question. A vendor says its MoE model has twice as many parameters as a dense competitor. Name two additional quantities needed before concluding it requires twice the inference cost.

Expected answer. At minimum, activated parameters/experts per token and the serving configuration (batch size, context/key-value cache, hardware/communication). Total parameter storage and routing overhead also matter.

Diagnoses the misconception that a headline parameter count uniquely determines compute cost.